Helena Miranda Mollo
Federal University of Ouro Preto
Ana Maria Mauad
Federal University of the State of Rio de Janeiro
Fernando Nicolazzi
Federal University of the Grande do Sul

The thickness of time: the writing of history and appropriation of the past in Brazil, 1838-1930

Abstract

Since the late 1980s, the word "thickness" has been increasingly used to express the modernist century as a period characterized by the acceleration of time. Based on this assumption, this article aims to analyze the writing of history and the appropriation of the past in Brazil, from the founding of the Brazilian Historical and Geographical Institute (IHGB) to the 1930 Revolution.

The origin of these two elements connected to the Portuguese expansion, however, its genealogy, strictly linked to Portugal, was also one of the factors that explained the writing of the history and the use of the past in Brazil.

Keywords: Historiography, Brazil, 19th century, 20th century.

Introduction

Since the 1980s, the word "thickness" has been increasingly used to express the modernist century as a period characterized by the acceleration of time. Based on this assumption, this article aims to analyze the writing of history and the appropriation of the past in Brazil, from the founding of the Brazilian Historical and Geographical Institute (IHGB) to the 1930 Revolution.

The origin of these two elements connected to the Portuguese expansion, however, its genealogy, strictly linked to Portugal, was also one of the factors that explained the writing of the history and the use of the past in Brazil.

Two interpretations, the recently born nation and the ancient Portuguese nation, which, in turn, coexisted in the same space, were responsible for the production of a historiography that was, at the same time, modern and traditional. Modern, because it was based on the principles of scientific history, which had been established in Europe since the 19th century, and traditional, because it was linked to the Portuguese historiographical tradition, which was responsible for the creation of mechanisms of appropriation of the past, such as the Brazilian Historical and Geographical Institute[1] (IHGB) and the National Archive[2] (AN). Both institutions were founded in the 19th century and were responsible for the creation of a memory and for the construction of the consensus of the nationalism of the bourgeois elite.

Despite the centrality of the IHGB, it was not the first or the only institution to formulate the identity of the nation. The Academia Real das Ciências de Lisboa (Royal Academy of Sciences of Lisbon), founded in 1779, was responsible for the publication of projects, in which the original characteristics of Brazil began to be outlined. Some of the members of the Academia were also responsible for the modern experience of three Intelligent Overseas Ministers[3] (months of experience of time, months of the Portuguese Empire) and the creation of the Brazilian Empire.

The 1822 Independence and the Empire (1822-1889) were responsible for the creation of a political project, which, in turn, was responsible for the production of a historiography that was, at the same time, modern and traditional. Modern, because it was based on the principles of scientific history, which had been established in Europe since the 19th century, and traditional, because it was linked to the Portuguese historiographical tradition, which was responsible for the creation of mechanisms of appropriation of the past, such as the Brazilian Historical and Geographical Institute[1] (IHGB) and the National Archive[2] (AN). Both institutions were founded in the 19th century and were responsible for the creation of a memory and for the construction of the consensus of the nationalism of the bourgeois elite.

Despite the centrality of the IHGB, it was not the first or the only institution to formulate the identity of the nation. The Academia Real das Ciências de Lisboa (Royal Academy of Sciences of Lisbon), founded in 1779, was responsible for the publication of projects, in which the original characteristics of Brazil began to be outlined. Some of the members of the Academia were also responsible for the modern experience of three Intelligent Overseas Ministers[3] (months of experience of time, months of the Portuguese Empire) and the creation of the Brazilian Empire.

The Brazilian Empire (1822-1889) was